FRONTIERS OF RESEARCH
$3,176,262

Penn Vet consistently strives to expand research dollars because it allows faculty and staff to find new methods of treating devastating diseases and illnesses which affect both animals and humans. Additional resources will enable Penn Vet to play a leading role in introducing novel strategies and treatments, such as stem cell therapies, in animals long before they can be applied to humans.

“It’s easy to see why I trust PennVet so much – being mom to cats with such serious, life-threatening medical conditions, only the best specialists are qualified to treat them. The extra years of life that Penn has provided my babies is priceless and for that, I’ll always be so grateful.”

SUPPORTING STUDENTS
$1,191,340
Allaying the national shortage of veterinarians poses a special challenge at Penn, where, as a private institution, tuition is relatively high. Graduates now leave the School of Veterinary Medicine with an average debt of $160,000. Relieving the burden will allow students to pursue post-doctoral studies and careers in fields where there are critical shortages. Scholarship support also allows Penn Vet to recruit the best and brightest students.

Pet Memorial participant

“When we received a Penn Vet pet memorial card from our veterinarian after our beloved pet dog passed away, we were so touched that we chose to express our condolences to our friends who lost their dogs by participating in the program, too. It’s never easy to lose a pet, but this gesture to fellow pet lovers reminds them that we are with them.”

— Tom Hassell, Pet Memorial participant
