An Afternoon with the Early Books Collective

On Wednesday, November 11th we spent an afternoon with some research librarians from Penn's Early Books Collective. Working in partnership with the Text Creation Partnership (TCP) and the Early English Books Online (EEBO) database, this group is working on transcribing The Booke of Pretty Conceites using the TEI encoding language.

The main challenge in such digital transcription work, as we quickly found out, is faithfully representing the book: the typography, the section divisions, and mis-en-page can all be described by various tags. As the excerpt from some of our work below shows, the majority of this sort of transcription is occupied by tags, not text.

```
<TEXT>

English.
</P>

Some of the "very merry, pleasant and good" conceites that the title alludes to include "An easie way to procure Fire speedily," "A speedy remedy for a prick of thorn in one's foot, or elsewhere," and directions "To make that no dog shall bark at you," to name a few.

Our group did not get a chance to transcribe much more than a few pages in our short time together but we look forward to more collaborations with the Early Books Collective soon!
