The Intricacies of Capturing the Holdings of a Mosque Library in Yemen: The Library of the Shrine of Imām al-Hādı, Ṣaʿda

Abstract
This article discusses the "The Zaydi Manuscript Tradition (ZMT)" initiative. The initiative aims to salvage the Zaydi literary tradition by gathering digital surrogates of as many Zaydi manuscripts as possible in a single repository and providing comprehensive and systematic open access to them for scholars worldwide, regardless of whether the physical manuscripts are preserved in Europe or in North America, in Yemen or elsewhere in the Middle East. The ZMT is a joint project initiated by the Institute for Advanced Study (IAS), Princeton, in partnership with the Hill Museum & Manuscript Library (HMML) at Saint John's University, Collegeville, Minnesota. Work on the ZMT began in September 2016 and to date the project comprises some 1,000 digitized manuscripts from several European and Yemeni libraries which are accessible online through the project's Portal and HMML's virtual reading room.

Heritage Under Threat

The libraries of Yemen are well known to be treasure troves not only for the rich and still largely unexplored literary tradition of the Zaydi branch of Shiism but also for a much wider spectrum of Islamic intellectual history, beyond Zaydism. The history of Zaydism in Yemen dates back to the ninth century CE when Imām al-Hādī Yahyā b. al-Ḥusayn (d. 298/911) founded a Zaydi state with Ṣaʿda as his capital. When in the sixth/twelfth century the Zaydis of Yemen became politically unified with their coreligionists in the Caspian region of northern Iran, where a second Zaydi state had been established during the ninth century, a transfer of scholars and books set in from northern Iran, a leading intellectual center at the time, to Yemen.

Some of the libraries in Yemen that were founded during this period still exist today. This is the case, by way of example, for the library that was... founded by Imām al-Manṣūr bi-llāh ‘Abd Allāh b. Ḥamza (r. 593/1197–614/1217) in his capital Zafār. The library grew steadily over the centuries and was transferred during the early twentieth century to the newly founded al-Khizāna al-mutawakkiliyya, nowadays the Maktabat al-Awqāf or al-Maktaba al-Sharqiyya, located on the premises of the Great Mosque in Sanaa in an annex building that had been constructed for this purpose by order of Imām Yahyā b. Muḥammad Ḥamīd al-Dīn (r. 1904–48).1

On the other hand, many of the libraries of Yemen were time and again affected by instances of loss of books through theft, confiscations, and even destruction of entire collections. In the course of Imām al-Manṣūr’s all-out war against the Muṭarrifiyya sect during the thirteenth century, for example, nearly the entire literary legacy of the Muṭarrifis was destroyed. Incidents of destruction of private book collections also occurred during the Ottoman occupation of major parts of Yemen, between 1547 and 1629 and again between 1872 and 1918.2 Moreover, from the second half of the nineteenth century onwards, manuscripts became a highly valuable commodity when European, Ottoman-Turkish, and Saudi merchants and travelers to Yemen began to purchase thousands of manuscripts that are nowadays housed by libraries outside of the country. In fact, one of the principal purposes behind Imam Yahyā Ḥamīd al-Dīn’s previously mentioned founding in 1925 of the Khizāna al-mutawakkiliyya in Sanaa, where he had the remains of the former ruler’s library in Zafār transferred, together with the holdings of many other historical libraries, was to put a stop to theft and other losses. The numerous codices that had originally been produced for the library of İmam al-Manṣūr bi-llāh and were sold at the end of the nineteenth and beginning of the twentieth centuries to various libraries in the Middle East and Europe indicate that this was indeed a serious concern. Confiscations of private libraries also frequently occurred over the course of the twentieth century. In 1948, when İmam Ahmad b. Yahyā Hamīd al-Dīn (r. 1948–62) ordered the execution of ʿAlī b. Muḥammad al-Wazīr, who served at the time as president of the parliament, and had some of the houses of the Bayt al-Wazīr demolished, the library of the Bayt al-Wazīr was confiscated and taken to the Great Mosque in Sanaa. Following the coup d’état of 1962, the former palace library and the personal collections of the members of the royal family, as well as the collections of former ministers and other government officials, were confiscated and eventually transferred to the Maktaba al-ğarbiyya and later on to the newly founded Dār al-makhṭūṭāt.

Over the second half of the twentieth and the first decades of the twenty-first century, Yemeni authorities have been constantly fighting manuscript dealers, trying to prevent them from smuggling manuscripts out of the country. Moreover, many of the libraries of Yemen have been severely damaged, looted, or even destroyed over the past few decades as a result of the political turmoil and wars that Yemen has witnessed, and the continuing war in the country, with daily bombardments, constitutes an imminent threat not only to the local population but also to the cultural heritage of the country, including its many libraries.

Salvaging the Zaydi/Yemeni Manuscript Tradition, 1951–2017

In view of the richness and the uniqueness of the manuscript holdings of the many public and private libraries in Yemen, various international projects have been launched since the early 1950s to salvage some of these treasures. In 1951–52, in 1964, and again in 1974, scholarly expeditions from Egypt were dispatched to Yemen. They explored the holdings of the various public libraries in Sanaa as well as those of some of the smaller libraries in Sanaa and other cities, and produced microfilms of selected manuscripts, which they brought back to Cairo. In 1982, a delegation from Kuwait assessed and partly microfilmed the manuscripts of the Maktabat al-āḥqāf in Tarīm in Hadhramaut, and in 1985 a Kuwaiti team engaged in filming and cataloging some 308 manuscripts held by the Dār al-makhtūṭāt in Sanaa. Iranian governmental and private institutions also engaged in filming significant numbers of Yemeni manuscripts at the turn of the millennium.

The various initiatives to produce surrogates of manuscripts, be it in microform or digitally, did not aim at preserving the manuscripts—the intention was rather to make them accessible to the respective local scholarly community in Egypt, Kuwait, or Iran, hence the selective approach in all those endeavors. Characteristically, the surrogates are housed in the relevant institution that was in charge of filming them in the first place, with no attempt to make them available to a larger audience. It is only in the case of Iran that the digital surrogates prepared were also made available to the Muʿassasat al-Imām Zayd b. ʿAlī al-thaqāfiyya (Imam Zayd bin Ali Cultural Foundation = IZbACF) in Sanaa, whose personnel continued to digitize the holdings of additional private libraries. The various recent digitization efforts supported by the German Foreign Office\textsuperscript{6} and the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft in conjunction with the National Endowment for the Humanities\textsuperscript{7} also aimed at capturing a select number of private collections. The holdings of seven personal libraries in Sanaa and Kawkabān were digitized in the course of the two projects, some three hundred manuscripts in total. Again, only a fraction of these digitized materials are available through open access to date.

The Zaydi Manuscript Tradition (ZMT) aims at salvaging the Zaydi literary tradition by gathering digital surrogates of as many Zaydi manuscripts as possible in a single repository and providing comprehensive and systematic open access to them for scholars worldwide, regardless of whether the physical manuscripts are preserved in Europe or in North America, in Yemen, or elsewhere in the Middle East. The ZMT is a joint project initiated by the Institute for Advanced Study (IAS), Princeton, in partnership with the Hill Museum and Manuscript Library (HMML) at Saint John’s University, Collegeville, Minnesota. Work on the ZMT began in September 2016, and to date the project comprises some 1,500 digitized manuscripts from several European and Yemeni libraries, which are accessible online through the project’s portal and HMML’s \textit{virtual} reading room. The initiative consists of two components: (1) a digital portal on the IAS website that serves as a comprehensive research guide to relevant collections of Zaydi manuscripts, providing precise information on the location of each collection with a full list of its holdings and the relevant bibliography for every single codex.\textsuperscript{8} The digital portal further functions as a \textit{gateway} to (2) the manuscript surrogates that are available in HMML’s \textit{virtual} reading room (vHMML),\textsuperscript{9} which serves as a repository of digital surrogates of manuscript

Among the collections that have recently been processed for inclusion in the ZMT project are the manuscripts of the library of the Imām al-Hādī mosque in Sa‘da.10 The history and current situation of the collection is characteristic for many manuscript libraries of Yemen, private as well as public. While the mosque was constructed during the lifetime of the Imam al-Hādī in the ninth century, the library was not set up until the early twentieth century, together with the madrasa ‘ilmīyya, which is also located on the premises of the mosque.11 While the library was counted at some point among the most important mosque libraries of Yemen, the situation began to deteriorate sometime before the revolution of 1962 with the appointment of al-qāḍī Hasan [b.] Ṣalāḥ Dabbāsh as its custodian, who was succeeded after his demise by his son, Ṣāliḥ. During their terms the library suffered from neglect and was subject to regular incidents of burglary and theft. The situation improved again during the 1990s following the appointment of Ahmad b. Muḥammad b. ‘Alī al-Shāmī (1926–2013) as minister of religious endowments and guidance (wazīr al-auqāf wa-l-irshād).12 Al-Shāmī took measures to salvage the library and encouraged the preparation of a catalog of its holdings.

In his survey of manuscript libraries of Yemen of 1993, ʿAbd al-Wahhāb ʿAlī al-Muʿayyad (d. 2005) gives the total number of manuscripts in the collection as “ca. 100,” adding that “the collection has been halved over the last thirty years owing to several factors, including war.” 13 The figure provided by al-Muʿayyad is corroborated by a catalog prepared by ʿAbd Allāh Ḥammūd Dirham al-ʿIzzī. The highest shelfmark recorded by al-ʿIzzī is “218,” while his catalog covers a total of only 131 codices. Assuming that the collection has again grown since 1993, this would confirm al-Muʿayyad’s statement that the collection had been halved over the past three decades. Al-ʿIzzī had completed his descriptions of the collection in May 2000 14—the Iranian scholar Sayyid ʿAlī Mūjānī relates in his preface to al-ʿIzzī’s catalog that when he visited Ṣaʿda in 2002, he was approached by al-ʿIzzī, who inquired about possibilities to have the catalog published. As a result of his mediation, Maḥmūd Maʿrashī, the head of the Āyat Allāh Maʿrashī Najafī Library in Qum, accepted al-ʿIzzī’s Fibris for publication, which was realized, as previously mentioned, in 2004. In return, the Iranians were granted the right to produce digital surrogates of a select number of codices that are nowadays accessible in various libraries in Iran, including the Marʿashī library in Qum. Al-ʿIzzī’s Fibris is included verbatim and in its entirety by ʿAbd al-Salām al-Wajih in his Maṣādir al-turāth fī l-maktabāt al-khāṣṣa fī l-Yaman,15 though the latter fails to credit al-ʿIzzī for his work. Al-ʿIzzī is only mentioned insofar as al-Wajih includes al-ʿIzzī’s introduction (pp. 429–32), with the latter’s signature at its end (p. 432).

Al-ʿIzzī arranged his descriptions of the manuscripts in his Fibris according to the following disciplines: Qurʾānic sciences and exegesis (pp. 13–16), traditions (pp. 17–19), theology (pp. 21–27), legal theory (pp. 29–33), law (pp. 35–67), law of inheritance (pp. 69–71), grammar (pp. 73–85), rhetorics (pp. 87–89), ascetism and mysticism (pp. 91–93), and multitext volumes (pp. 95–133). This structure disagrees with the arrangement of the manuscripts in the library itself, as is indicated by the shelfmarks recorded by al-ʿIzzī. The original library arrangement looks as presented in table 1.

The digital surrogates of manuscripts from the library that were produced at the time amount to seventy codices in total. In table 2, those listed in al-ʿIzzī’s catalog that have been digitized are marked in bold.

In addition to these, the digital collection of the Imām al-Hādī library comprises twenty-one codices that are not described in al-ʿIzzī’s catalog. The possibility that these constitute later additions to the library cannot be ruled out, though it might be more plausible that al-ʿIzzī’s catalog covers only a part of the library’s holdings. The actual size and scope of its manuscript collection thus remains uncertain—an observation that applies to most if not all published catalogs of private manuscript collections in Yemen.

Al-ʿIzzī’s partial catalog of the collection and, more importantly, the digital surrogates that are now accessible through vHMML provide a sound material basis to study the curriculum that was taught at the madrasa ʿilmīyya in Ṣa‘da. The majority of titles represent the standard canon of Zaydi scholarship at the turn of the twentieth century, with a clear focus on Islamic law that is suggested by the proportionally high percentage of works on fiqh, legal theory and inheritance law.16

At the same time, the Imām al-Hādī library houses a number of rarities. For the Mu’tazilite tradition, these comprise an incomplete copy of the first part of the theological summa, K. al-Mu’tamad fi ʿusul al-dīn, by Rukn al-Dīn Maḥmūd b. al-Malāḥimī al-Khwārazmī (d. 536/1141), the principal an encyclopedic theological summa with detailed discussions of substances, physics, and biology from a Mu'tazilite theologian's point of view. This last part of the Sharḥ al-'Uyūn is otherwise attested only in two manuscripts that are preserved in the Maktabat al-awqāf in Sanaa and in the library of the King Saud University. Another noteworthy work in the field of theology is Umdat al-mustarshidīn, a theological summa by the prominent thirteenth-century Yemeni/Zaydi theologian Abū ʿAbd Allāh Ḥumayd b. Aḥmad al-Muḥallī (d. 652/1254). The library also has a copy of K. Nusrat al-shīʿa al-aḥl al-madhbāhib al-shanīʿa, by a certain “Abd al-Maḥmūd b. Dāwūd” (figs. 2 and 3). The author's name is a pseudonym of the renowned Imami scholar Raḍī al-Dīn ʿĀlī b. Mūsā Ibn Ṭāwūs (d. 664/1266), and the work in question is his polemical anti-Sunni text al-Ṭarāʾif fi [maʿrifat] madhbāb al-tawāʿif. It is only among the Zaydis of Yemen that this otherwise famous work circulated under a different title that is attested in this manuscript.

The manuscript is not described in al-ʿIzzi's catalog.

The collection contains a fair amount of incomplete codices, with beginning and/or end missing. About two-third of the manuscripts are dated: nineteen manuscripts were produced during the eleventh/seventeenth century, eleven manuscripts were transcribed during the tenth/sixteenth century, eight manuscripts are dated to the ninth/eleventh century, two manuscripts are dated to the eighth/fourteenth century, and two to the seventh/thirteenth...

30 To the extent this could be verified, some of the dates provided by al-ʿIzzī in his catalog turned out to be erroneous. In more general terms, his descriptions are not always reliable and should be treated with some caution.
