Dante’s Commedia is surely one of the most fascinating and evocative poems which naturally attracted the interests of readers, book owners and publishers for the manifold applications its verses experienced, and still experience, in the field of illustrations. Thus, the importance of the book series Dante visualizzato is to collect studies, insights and accurate contributions about the role and the forms illustrations played in the transmission of Dante’s work.

In particular, volumes Carte ridenti II and III collect the proceedings of two international conferences: the first, held in Florence on April 18–20, 2016, was focused on the first half of the fifteenth century (without however neglecting the late 14th) and Commedia manuscript production; the second, held in Tours and Paris between May 31 and June 3, 2017, moved to the second half of the fifteenth century, consequently considering both manuscripts and printed books. The main feature of both volumes is their multidisciplinary approach, involving codicology, history of art, literature, digital humanities etc.: even though many contributions deal with different case studies or areas, the reader will perceive an atmosphere of continuous dialogue, a fil rouge which goes beyond the common subject.

So, that said, contributions on wider subjects are numerous and rich. In Carte ridenti II: Marisa Boschi Rotiroti and Francesca Pasut (pp. 11–33) analyze manuscripts of Dante’s Commedia produced in Florence between the second half of the fourteenth and the first half of the fifteenth century; Chiara Ponchia (pp. 35–46) focuses on iconographical strategies and representations in Commedia manuscript transmission, examining also two examples (Firenze, Biblioteca Nazionale Centrale, B.R. 39 and Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, It. 78); Paolo Procaccio (pp. 119–132) investigates the still obscure topic of the lecturae Dantis in the first part of the fifteenth century, in order to find a link with contemporary illustration trends; Marco Cursi and Luisa Miglio (pp. 179–201) present their research on Commedia manuscripts in mercantesca script, focusing on the first half of the fifteenth century (not a particularly rich period for this kind of production) and analyzing some interesting cases. In Carte ridenti III: Gennaro Ferrante (pp. 35–53) shows the influence iconography of Dante’s Commedia exerted on illustrators of Vergil’s Aeneid; Matthew Collins (pp. 115–133) investigates genealogic relationships between illuminated manuscripts and incunables; Maria Maślanka-Soro (pp. 209-225) and Angelo Eugenio Mecca (pp. 255-269) reflect on the role of illustrations in text interpretation and philological studies; Giancarlo Petrella (pp. 227-253) examines editions of illustrated Commedia, starting from the Florentine 1481 edition up to the 1491 Venice one.

Contributions on single case studies, particular manuscripts and editions, or very specific themes are even more richly represented. In Carte ridenti II: Anna Pegoretti (pp. 47-72) studies what is considered the first topo-chronography of Dante’s Commedia, Cammino di Dante, written by the Florentine notary Piero Bonaccorsi in the 1430s; Joan Molina Figuera and Vincenzo Vitale (pp. 91-118) examine the illuminated manuscript London, British Library, Yates Thompson 36, owned by Alfonso the Magnanimous of Aragon King of Naples and presented here as an example of political representation; Andrea Improta (pp. 133-142) shows the late 14th-century codex Cambridge, Cambridge University Library, Gg.3.6, connecting it to Ugolino III Lord of Foligno and Federico Frezzi, author of Quadriregio; Gianni Pittiglio (pp. 143-163) analyses the manuscript Madrid, Biblioteca Nacional, 10057 and its illustrations, in order to look for their sources in commentaries, such as the one by Giovanni da Serravalle, and enlightening their anti-Papal critical attitude; Susy Marcon (pp. 165-178) moves the attention to the Istrian environment, studying two illuminated manuscripts of the Commedia written by chancellor Pietro Campenni between the late Trecento and the following century; Eva Ponzi (pp. 203-213) underlines the old-fashioned illumination style in the Ott. lat. 2863 of the Vatican Library; Salvatore Sansone (pp. 215-228) studies the representation of the last Purgatorio cantos in some manuscripts; Gennaro Ferrante (pp. 229-255) and Ciro Perna (pp. 257-264) talk about the possibilities the Illuminated Dante Project (IDP) can provide in manuscript studies, introducing the reader to the field of digital humanities; Anna Perriccioli Saggese (pp. 265-276) focuses on the illustrations contained in the manuscript M.676 of the Morgan Library; even the world of modern book selling and book collecting is represented thanks to Daniele Guernelli’s essay (pp. 277-289). In Carte ridenti III: Claudia Cieri Via (pp. 15-33) and Giulia Puma (pp. 55-72) study the illuminated Urb. lat. 365, commissioned by Federico da Montefeltro Duke of Urbino in 1474, showing its importance, its complexity and its role as iconographical model; Florence, Landino’s commentary and illustrations by Baldini for the 1481 edition of the Commedia appear in contributions by Paolo Procaccioli (pp. 73-94) and Marcello Ciccuto (pp. 95-100); Beatrice Arduini (pp. 101-114) introduces the eclectic figure of Antonio Manetti; Luca Marozzi (pp. 135-159) and Silvia Maddalfo (pp. 193-207) study the incunable of Dante’s main poem illuminated by Antonio Grifo; Gianni Pittiglio (pp. 161-192) is interested on how Paradiso was represented in incunables printed in Venice in 1491.

These dense volumes begin with an introductory premise by the editors and end with a bibliography and rich indexes: names and places, manuscripts and Dante’s quotes in vols. II and III; incunables of the Commedia, illuminated incunables and other incunables only in vol. III. Since indexes provide a valuable and fundamental help to consultation, the main argument of these books might have been even more fulfilling by adding an index of the illustrations.
Overall, these two volumes give the reader a great and accurate collection of insights on illustration of Dante’s verses in the fifteenth century, blending multiple disciplines and connecting manuscripts and printing.

As the current issue of Bibliotheca Dantesca comes out, the first two volumes (Introduction and Inferno) of the new critical edition of Dante’s Comedy, edited by the so-called Gruppo di Ferrara, should already have been or will soon be released. Their publication marks a turning point in the editorial history of the Comedy, and in textual philology and criticism in general. Conducted on ca. 630 loci critici and more than 580 witnesses, the collation carried out by the Gruppo di Ferrara, led by Paolo Trovato, is a truly remarkable endeavor that no Dante scholar nor textual critic will be able to ignore. Nuove Prospettive offers us a glimpse into their workshop, shedding light on the problems they faced, as well as on their methodology and some preliminary results.

Nuove Prospettive is the proceeding of an online symposium held in June 2020, in which the Gruppo di Ferrara confronted a selected group of Dante scholars and philologists in preparation of the new edition of the Comedy. The first part of the volume, “Qualche altra idea su Dante,” features seven essays presented by the members of the Gruppo. The second part, “Note e commenti,” is a collection of objections, observations, and further considerations from the discussants invited to the conference.

The essay by Luisa Ferretti Cuomo, who is charge of the new edition’s commentary, opens the volume. It is a highly enjoyable, insightful, and informative collection of five case studies that show what the lexicological challenges of glossing the Comedy are and what tools should be used to reconstruct the history and meaning of problematic terms. In the following essay, Elisabetta Tonello shares some considerations about the contaminations of the manuscripts belonging to the p.e.rièria stemmatica (“...the witnesses that cannot be linked to neither big nor small families,”1 p. 23) of the Tuscan–Florentine tradition of the Comedy: Tonello provides detailed tables that summarize her findings. She takes into consideration both contaminations of readings, “when the copyist chooses case by case, line by line, from two or more models simultaneously present on their desk,” or contamination of exemplars, “when the models alternate regularly” (p. 25). She also identifies and investigates a third kind of contamination, which she terms “hybrid,” that is a
