Concept Note

OCP Policy Center and the Think Tank and Civil Societies Program of the University of Pennsylvania, with the support of the Moroccan International Cooperation Agency (AMCI), the Asian Development Bank hosted the 2018 Africa Think Tank Summit under the theme “Deepening Expertise and Enhancing Sustainability: Insight into Contemporary Challenges Facing African Think Tanks.”

The summit was held May 9-11th, 2018 at The View Hotel, Rabat, Morocco. The most influential and innovative think tanks in Africa gathered to discuss contemporary issues they are facing, such as the challenges of deepening expertise, the role of the media and the press in propelling the African agendas, the role of think tanks in driving the African diaspora, and the role of think tanks in building an inclusive policy dialogue.

The Summit was also an excellent opportunity to explore how think tanks can implement the strategies developed in previous Summits to enhance capacity, increase impact and assure the long term viability of think tanks in the region. Much work has been done lately on the issue of making think tanks “fit for purpose,” in terms of quality, vibrancy, relevance and sustainability. We believe that think tanks from across Africa benefit from learning about and finding ways to introduce innovations and adaptations identified in other think tank fora.

Format

This Summit is conducted in a Roundtable Format with panels that are intended to frame the key issues and provide constructively provocative questions to stimulate the discussion that follows each Session. The Summit is conducted in accordance with the Chatham House Rule
Key Takeaways

Why the World Needs African Think Tanks

African think tanks are vital to both the African region and to the world as a whole, especially given the turbulent times.

African think tanks can provide local expertise with a global quality and a deep African perspective. In this way, they are a valuable piece of a shared vision of peace and security. Both national governments and international organizations, would face substantial ramifications should African think tanks disappear; just consider the economic and security implications of not providing support for the critical thinking through the turbulent crisis that we are in. By having their feet on the ground and a network in place, African think tanks can conduct thorough research that informs smart policy and smart decisions.

Increasingly, local expertise is being valued more highly than that of foreign organizations by African governments, as former President of Nigeria H.E. Olusegun Obasanjo commented, going even further to state, “We must ensure that African leaders know they will not achieve success at the regional level if they fail to do so at the domestic level... think tanks are indispensable.”

Think tanks, the African region, and the international community all stand to benefit from the increased capacity, quality and sustainability of African think tanks.
Key Takeaways

The Future of African Think Tanks: An Opportunity in Crisis

In 2014, Dr. Frannie Leautier, former Executive Secretary of the ACBF, reported that 30% of Africa’s think tanks may close or be in serious crisis. With the departure of key donors currently accelerating and predicted to continue accelerating for the next 2-3 years, this prediction is perilously close to becoming true.

As repeatedly remarked at the Summit, the magnitude of the challenges faced by all African think tanks are immense. These challenges manifest in different ways across think tanks in the region but have large, thematic commonalities. Some of the most pressing and key challenges include:

- Fleeing funds (most notably the departure of donor funds following a massive increase in research support, leaving behind inflated budgets and new, large gaps in funding)
- A lack of core funding (instead project specialized), leading to a lack of core infrastructure and long term planning
- A legacy of colonialism that manifests in distrust between Northern and Southern think tanks

Given these identified challenges,* participants in the 2018 African Think Tank Summit undertook a series of discussions that materialized in a conglomeration of actionable recommendations.

*For a more in-depth and expansive analysis, see section: Enhancing the Sustainability of African Think Tanks
Key Takeaways

Action Items: Beyond the Summit

The 2018 Africa Think Tank Summit paved a path forward for the future of African think tanks. With a deep understanding of the grave challenges being faced, summit participants forged a series of steps and actionable recommendations which will be acted upon by participating think tanks in conjunction with TTCSP, and in which all African think tanks are encouraged to participate:

- A Best Practices Committee will be assembled to review and tailor TTCSP’s globally compiled think tank “best practices” to the African continent. These best practices will then be disseminated to the think tanks of the region.

- A Women in Think Tanks Network will be created to mentor and train women entering the workforce and to analyze African think tanks’ gender policy implementation with an international standard.

- African think tanks will each produce a strategic plan to specifically lay out their organization’s mission, scope, goals, timeline, etc.

- Future African think tank summits will include capacity building workshops, such as modifying templates to fit each organization’s financial needs.

All African think tanks are encouraged to consider these recommendations and take part in them. Further recommendations are also included throughout this report.
Enhancing the Sustainability of African Think Tanks

Striving for Financial Sustainability

Challenges

The worth of the African think tank is being undermined from multiple angles.

Most clearly, funding is one of the biggest challenges faced by African think tanks. Funding is often uncertain, irregular, insufficient, and unequally distributed. This funding is also over-reliant on international donors, while governments face pressed budgets or understate the importance of think tanks. This combination has created competition between governments and think tanks to secure funds from the same international organizations, continuing to undermine the work of think tanks.

However, not only do think tanks often lose credibility when they rely on international donors, but such international donors are facing donor fatigue and shifting to humanitarian crisis. The most clear illustration of this is the Think Tank Initiative, managed by IDRC, which pumped millions of dollars into a select number of top think tanks in Africa and is set to end this year (2018). No think tank has yet been able to fully replace the departing funds, meaning that, for many think tanks, their capacity is about to be greatly oversized for the new incoming budget.

Confounding this problem is the lack of attention that has been paid to core support; donors have preferred and almost exclusively funded project-specialized programs which result in a fast, tangible result. The consequence of this the ‘hollowing out’ of institutions (such as the frequent departure of researchers who leave when the funds dry up), leading to the oversupply of weak and fragile specialized think tanks that are marginal and not sustainable.
Illustrated, this fragility means one cannot support other aspects of the operations because funders do not want to pay for four core areas: management, communications, technology and resource mobilization. For example, a think tank cannot move a fixed core of highly specialized skilled researchers around to investigate topics outside of the realm of their expertise. These four core areas are critical for the survival of institutions. The neglect of these areas by donors makes the think tank ecosystem fragile and unsustainable, and it undermines development throughout Africa.

Recommendations

Procuring funds to develop strong African think tanks requires new business models. As Dr. James G. McGann, Director of the Think Tanks and Civil Societies Program, stated, “the days of international donor funding for think tanks is over but with few expectations.”

This rethinking of how African think tanks are funded may include an examination in the following areas:

- How to turn African think tanks from being more academically oriented to being more policy relevant.
- Whether to look at providing services on a contract basis in a consulting capacity for both international and government entities, and if so, what kinds of guidelines are needed.
- How to sit down with key donors to articulate the fundamental changes.

These questions will also require an analysis of the negotiation between financial stability and independence. Additionally, further recommendations surrounded the integration of Agenda 2064 into the strategic plans of think tanks and nations, and utilizing foreign ministers and think tanks to further Agenda 2064.
Enhancing the Sustainability of African Think Tanks

Achieving Strategic Partnerships

Challenges

Strategic partnerships with policy makers and the public are integral. Currently, think tanks are underutilized and underappreciated by African policy makers, and a close relationship can lead to issues of transparency and neutrality. When it comes to the public, the media has their own agenda, creating the need to develop very specific and strong strategies.

Recommendations

Some recommendations to strengthen strategic partnerships with policy makers and the public are:

- Ensure mutual ownership with the public by working with those who are going to be affected by the results of the study.
- Improve relationship with policy makers by choosing a topic that is very important and timing the release of information carefully for the largest impact.
- Consult with your partners early and work collaboratively.
- Pay attention to language use and location (cultural sensitivity of the work).
- Built trust with donors through shared value and quality.
- Cultivate relationships with journalists to improve media coverage.
Enhancing the Sustainability of African Think Tanks

Digitization: Adaptations in Strategic Communication

Challenges

Think tanks must adapt to the new mean of communication; this means changing the types of products that think tanks produce. Books, journals, and policy briefs are no longer being read. While television, radio and newspaper will continue to be important in Africa, other communication mediums such as through mobile communication and shorter form products are also necessary.

Endless advances in technology present challenges. Technology has created impact on politics through fake news, misinformation, and populism. The resulting increased velocity of information and policy flows affect think tank business models and the timeline of research. As civil society and democracy are being challenged, think tanks are the entity which stand between ‘fake news’ and ‘real news.’

Recommendations

Understanding technology, what is appropriate and what will improve the research is key. How can academic ideas be translated into practical terms and delivered in a shorter time frame while maintaining credibility? Mobile technology may be the key. Politicians have put down their book for their phone; producing things in the mobile product form is key.
Enhancing the Sustainability of African Think Tanks

Women in Leadership

Challenges

There is a large disparity between the amount of women clustered at the staff support level and the amount of women in leadership within African think tanks. Women also face barriers to entry, especially when it comes to participating in dialogues, and are typically a minority in closed door meetings or strategy meetings.

While the policy to protect and further women in the workforce exists, implementation is lacking. There is still the expectation of the motherhood penalty versus the fatherhood bonus in terms of how women are viewed in their workplace.

Recommendations

1. Better female representation must be built through mentorship, training, and media. Training gives the tools needed to manage dialogues, raise issues and reach agreement; mentorship is critical and begins in university to help women choose their career paths; and media can make the women experts known.

2. Find out the best practices: Conduct SWOT (Strength, Weakness, Opportunities and Threats) analysis within African think tanks. Use benchmarks from successful Western think tanks that have been able to address these issues effectively.
3. Need zero tolerance of infractions on the issues. Think tanks must include feminism into their mission.

4. Do not create an African standard. Progress must be benchmarked tested with the international and global standard of this issue.

5. Involve male champions. Most of the mentors of women are men. Women have to recruit more men to join this drive (this is not a fight). It is about equity and not equality. Importance of creating visibility and raising the profile for women in the media.

6. Creating symbols of aspiration that allows young kids to see themselves in these symbols

7. Action Step is to create African Women Think Tank Network.

8. Need funding to translate the action plans into actions. We need funding to monitor what is being done and share funding with others.
Policy Directions

African Diaspora

Challenges

The African Diaspora poses a dilemma for nations. While many of those in the diaspora regret why they left and come back (especially Masters students with a passion for entrepreneurship), they are not always welcome. In addition, governance issues mean that citizens are either in or out of local networks in regards to membership of a specific group.

The diaspora is not homogeneous, but those who are part of the diaspora tend to be highly motivated to bring about change, creating an opportunity.

Future Directions

In order to utilize the skills and passion of those overseas, Africa must adopt the right policies so that those of the diaspora feel welcome at home. For those that choose to remain overseas, technology enables them to contribute to Africa from abroad. By embracing those who are overseas, those of the diaspora also become advocates for Africa in their new country.
Policy Directions

Agriculture

Challenges

Agricultural productivity has been low, as the proceeds of gains are not sustainably growing. Think tanks must focus on what better infrastructure is needed, along with technological adaption.

Future Directions

It is important to ask about the number of think tanks that specialized in the agriculture-specific sector. Think tanks need to understand weather, climate, soil, and genetics, as well as African infrastructure and ability to distribute.

Research also needs to be applied to which crops different countries or regions should focus on based on nutrition, climate, soil conditions, and infrastructure. By focusing on the ‘triple helix of innovation,’ focused on the private sector, research institutions, and the government, there can be a circular relationship that doesn’t put burden on any one particular entity.
Policy Directions

Security

Challenges

The funding of state armies continues to be a challenge for many African nations, while, as one participant noted, “we spend money on peace keeping where there is no peace to keep.” Given the steep challenges that security poses in Africa, think tanks have a critical role in developing narratives and discovering the motives and underpinning of terrorist movements and threats, such as the influences of education and poverty.

Future Directions

Horizontal partnerships across research institutions need to be strengthened to take make the most of human capital. Data is a useful tool to forecast national and regional structural pressures, while ethnography can help to analyze and make sense of that data. By using an interdisciplinary approach, also integrating economics and security, a clearer picture of the security landscape in Africa will become more clear.

In addition, financial independence of think tanks focusing on security is an area that needs improvement; currently, 80% of funds for security think tank work in Africa comes from EU partners.

18:30-19:30 Break
19:30-21:00 Dinner

Thursday, May 10, 2018

08:30-09:00 Registration
09:00-09:30 Welcome Remarks
  • Mohammed Loulichki, Senior Fellow, OCP Policy Center
  • James G. McGann, Senior Lecturer and Director Think Tanks and Civil Societies Program, Lauder Institute, University of Pennsylvania

09:30-10:00 Keynote Address: Mr. Abdou Diop, President, African and South South Relations, Confederation of Moroccan Enterprises: Roadmap to building bridges between think tanks and the private sector
10:00-10:15 Coffee Break
10:15-11:30 Plenary Session: The Think Tank Sustainability Crisis In Africa and Its Potential Impact on Think Tanks, Policy Makers and the Public
  Keynote Address: James G. McGann, Senior Lecturer and Director Think Tanks and Civil Societies Program, Lauder Institute, University of Pennsylvania in conversation with Patrick Malope, Professor, Botswana Institute for Development Policy Analysis (BIDPA) and Landry Signé, Fellow, Africa Growth Initiative, Brookings Institution and Senior Fellow, OCP Policy Center

11:30-12:45 Break Out Sessions (A)
  Break Out Session I: Agenda for Enhancing Research on Agricultural Productivity in Africa

Chair: Adebisi Araba, Africa Director at the International Center for Tropical Agriculture and member, Malabo-Montpellier panel
Tadesse Kuma Worako, Director of Agricultural and Rural Development Research Center, Ethiopian Development Research Institute (EDRI)
Patrick Malope, Professor, Botswana Institute for Development Policy Analysis (BIDPA)

Break Out Session II: The Role of Think Tanks in Advocating for Green Energy in Africa

Chair: Aziz Mekouar, Ambassador to Multilateral Negotiations of COP22

Rachid El Mrabet, Director, Projects and innovation, Research Institute for Renewable and New Energy
Majdoub Molka, Energy Economist, African Development Bank

Break Out Session III: The Quality-Capacity Conundrum: How to Enhance Capacity and Maintain Quality and Independence with Limited or No Institutional Support

The purpose of this session is to bring together a group of think tank executives to share their views on how to meet the challenge of how to raise funds and produce quality research while also maintaining institutional independence. This requires a delicate balancing act that think tanks around the world must manage on a daily basis.

Chair: Lea Metke, Project Officer to the Director, French Institute of International Relations (IFRI)
Landry Signé, Rubenstein Fellow, Africa Growth Initiative, Brookings Institution; Chairman, Global Network for Africa’s Prosperity
Selorm Branttie, Vice President, IMANI-Africa Center for Policy and Education
Thula Sizwe Dlamini, Executive Director, Swaziland Economic Policy Analysis and Research Centre (SEPARC)

Break Out Session IV: Why Think Tanks Matter in Africa: Forging Strategic Partnerships with Policy Makers, Donors and the Public

The purpose of this session is to bring together a group of think tank executives to share their views on how think tanks can more effectively engage policymakers and the public in policy issues that are key to Africa’s development. Think tanks are critical in supporting the implementation of key economic, social and good governance policies and programs, but they could do a more effective job in reaching key audiences and stakeholders. This session will explore how think tanks can utilize strategic communications, strategic partnerships and new technologies to increase revenue, reach and impact.
Chair: Monde Muyangwa, Director, Africa Program, Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars

Mounsif Aderkaoui, Director of Studies and Financial Forecasts, Ministry of Economy and Finance
Idayat Hassan, Director, Centre for Democracy and Development
Richard Fonteh Akum, Senior Researcher, Institute for Security Studies

12:45-13:30  Break Out Session A Highlights with Round Table Discussion

13:30-15:00  Networking Luncheon

15:00-15:45  Keynote Address: Her Excellency Mrs. Mounia Boucetta, Secretary of State in charge of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation, Kingdom of Morocco: Rethinking Strategic Partnerships between the Public Sector and Policy Oriented Institutions

16:00-17:15  Break Out Session (B)

Chair: Monde Muyangwa, Director, Africa Program, Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars

Amal Sakr, Deputy Director for Executive Affairs, Future for Advanced Research and Studies (FARS)
Lettie Tembo Longwe, Programme Management and Institutional Development Team Leader, IPSS
Idayat Hassan, Director, Centre for Democracy and Development
Bouchra Benhida, Senior Fellow, OCP Policy Center

Break Out Session VI: Think Tanks and the African Diaspora: Bringing Brilliant Minds Back

Chair: Landry Signé, Rubenstein Fellow, Africa Growth Initiative, Brookings Institution; Chairman, Global Network for Africa’s Prosperity

Kathy Berrada, Research Associate, The Arab Center for Scientific Research and Humane Studies
Siré Sy, President, Africa WorldWide Group Think Tank
Zoubir Benhamouche, Economist, United Nations Economic Commission for Africa
Break Out Session VII: Rethinking Institutional Partnerships for Policy Impact, Resource Mobilization and Sustainability

Chair: Amira Kridagh, Legal and Advocacy Officer, Soidar Tunisie
Laoye Jaiyeola, CEO, Nigerian Economic Summit Group
Shinichi Nakabayashi, Director, Administration, Management & Coordination, Asian Development Bank Institute (ADBI)
Winfred Weck, Coordinator on Development Policy and Human Rights, Konrad-Adenauer-Stiftung

Break Out Session VIII: Realizing Sustainable Future for Africa’s Think Tanks: An Action Agenda for a Comprehensive Security Dialogue

This Session is meant to bring together ideas and issues discussed at the Summit and formulate some possible conclusions and concrete recommendations for action that will help alleviate the think tank sustainability crisis in Africa. The Panel is expected to help participants generate a plan of action that will focus on realizing a sustainable future for Africa’s think tanks, while building expertise to assess security threats.

Chair: Jalal Abdel Latif, Senior Fellow, OCP Policy Center
Richard Fonteh Akum, Senior Researcher, Institute for Security Studies
Hugo Sada, Special Advisor, Dakar International Forum on Peace and Security in Africa
Tigist Yeshiwas, Assistant Profession, Institute for Peace and Security Studies (IPSS)

About TTCSP*

Think Tanks and Civil Societies Program:

The Think Tanks and Civil Societies Program (TTCSP) of the Lauder Institute at the University of Pennsylvania conducts research on the role policy institutes play in governments and civil societies around the world. Often referred to as the “think tanks’ think tank,” TTCSP examines the evolving role and character of public policy research organizations. Over the last 25 years, the TTCSP has developed and led a series of global initiatives that have helped bridge the gap between knowledge and policy in critical policy areas such as international peace and security, globalization and governance, international economics, environmental issues, information and society, poverty alleviation, and healthcare and global health. These international collaborative efforts are designed to establish regional and international networks of policy institutes and communities that improve policy making while strengthening democratic institutions and civil societies around the world.

The TTCSP works with leading scholars and practitioners from think tanks and universities in a variety of collaborative efforts and programs, and produces the annual Global Go To Think Tank Index that ranks the world’s leading think tanks in a variety of categories. This is achieved with the help of a panel of over 1,900 peer institutions and experts from the print and electronic media, academia, public and private donor institutions, and governments around the world. We have strong relationships with leading think tanks around the world, and our annual Think Tank Index is used by academics, journalists, donors and the public to locate and connect with the leading centers of public policy research around the world. Our goal is to increase the profile and performance of think tanks and raise the public awareness of the important role think tanks play in governments and civil societies around the globe.

Since its inception in 1989, the TTCSP has focused on collecting data and conducting research on think tank trends and the role think tanks play as civil society actors in the policymaking process. In 2007, the TTCSP developed and launched the global index of think tanks, which is designed to identify and recognize centers of excellence in all the major areas of public policy research and in every region of the world. To date TTCSP has provided technical assistance and capacity building programs in 81 countries. We are now working to create regional and global networks of think tanks in an effort to facilitate collaboration and the production of a modest yet achievable set of global public goods. Our goal is to create lasting institutional and state-level partnerships by engaging and mobilizing think tanks that have demonstrated their ability to produce high quality policy research and shape popular and elite opinion and actions for public good.
